I heard this, the music is very similar to the music sos by Rhianna. Looks like the song came out in the 1980s and 1990s... The singer says this: You have to run, oh, run away as far as I know, her not chinkees. Thanks! Keep up with the latest daily buzz with the BuzzFeed Daily newsletter! Walt Disney Pictures It's almost impossible to imagine our favorite Christmas movies without accompanying them to film scores. Over the years, these classic songs have become the soundtracks of our very own holiday season. Listen to chords chords And we're like Pavlov's dogs, drooling over freshly baked sugar biscuits and mugs of hot cocoa by the fire. The film industry knows all too well our deep-seated connection between certain stories and certain memories. This is one reason why a handful of classic songs show up in movies over and over again. If you need a mood and tell the audience that it's holiday time, playing jingle bells like diegetic sound is a pretty good way to get a point over it, writes Walt Hickey for FiveThirtyEight. (It also helps that many classical songs are so old they are in the past under copyright law, part of a public domain and free to use.) Here are the most popular Christmas songs in movies, as reported by Forbes: Forbes/ Statista Do You Believe People Have Sung We Wish You A Merry Christmas since 1500?! I can't believe you did this. If you've been too packed for Christmas, pretty much the entire band's catalog showed up on most streaming sites on Christmas Eve. Offering the longtime Beatles devotes another chance to access their music, the long-awaited arrival of the band's work on streaming services is also expected to win a group of legion of new, younger fans. During the first 48 hours of availability, during which the band's tracks saw about 50 million streams, Come Together emerged as the world's favorite Beatles song - among Spotify users, at least. Originally released in 1969 towards the end of the Fab Four's recording career, the song came top not only on Spotify's global chart, but also on its US and UK charts. Other tracks on the streaming service's top 10 Beatles lists (check them out below) span the entire group's career, from early pop ditties like Love Me Do and I want to keep my hand that later triumphs like Let It Be and Hey Jude. When the group catalog arrived at the iTunes store in 2010, Come Together was the ninth most popular Beatles download within the first 24 hours. Hey Jude topped that particular list (you can see it at the end of this piece). Songs from the legendary Liverpool pop band have already added more than 673,000 playlists to Spotify alone, Billboard reported, indicating great interest in new content. Day life editors recommendations This weekend, at a nightclub in Harvard Square, Belle Linda Halpern is singing her favorite selections from several popular musicals, including Pirate Jenny from Threepenny Opera and Something Is Coming From West Side Story. Right now, though, he's helping me with the presentation - and I'm the one bursting into the song. Halpern, founder of Cambridge-based Ariel Group, Inc., is an accomplished cabaret singer who still performs at least once a month. The rest of the time he instructs businessmen on how to perform more effectively, interacting more emotionally. We follow our train though, and we admire your logic. But we want to get in touch with you as a person, we need to see how you feel about things. I turned to Halpern for advice on a call I had to send to 30 people. It was, I understood, a well-structured presentation - so well structured that my audience could plan exactly when to fall asleep. Introduction. First point. Second point. Conclusion. Pass on NoDoo. I thought I needed professional help. After listening to me, Halpern agreed. First of all, he said, I need more animation. Instead of using logic for transition (Now, if you understand my first point, let me turn to your other side.) I should use expressive hand gestures and add emotional colors to my face. I'm not suggesting you're flashy, Halpern counseled, but we need to see what you think about things. So we tried the exercise. Halpern assigned me a topic (in my neighborhood) and asked me to start talking. Every 10 seconds, he cried about a different idiot - love, hate, humility, happiness— for which I made an eloquent transition. (I love people and a sense of history in my neighborhood. I hate I'm learning about crime in my block.) Time and time again, Halpern forced me to communicate with tools other than my voice. If I were deaf - or back in line - I would need to know your body language for what you're talking about, she explained. Actually, my vote was the next big challenge. Describing my voice as monotonous assumes that this is the tone in the first place. So it was time for another exercise, the one that involved Shakespeare. Halpern asked me to read the four-line passage to Tempest, which takes a different voice for each line. Don't be afraid (Ethel Merman shouts across the street); The Isle is full of voices (high-speaker Seinfeld whispering in his ear), Sounds and Sweet Airs (James Earl Jones yawning). It gives joy and hurt not (Kenneth Branagh plays the king). The idea, he explained, is to stretch your voice in the same way you stretch the rubber band. It breaks back, but it's more flexible than before you stretched it. The biggest problem, however, was my reluctance to pause - a common presentation error. I would make a point and then rush examples without letting the point sink in I know that pauses feel gargantuan over time when you're there, Halpern sympathy, but for the audience, a few seconds of pause is generous. It says: I think it's important enough to give you a moment to take it. If I can't stand the silence, he added, I should take a few steps around the stage or take a drink of water. Whatever I do, the goal is the same: just stop talking. We completed our fast-track course by revisiting my original presentation. Who would have thought it would be so gripping? Introduction. Pause. Scary face. High voice. First point. Pause. Excited hands. Strong voice. Second point. Pause. Finale. Applause.Siskel and Ebert, where are you? Contact Belle Linda arielfgroup@aol.com. .
